A PRETTY PROPOSAL.

I've lost a heart, Yes, lost a heart-I wonder who has found it; Not a trinket blue, Of azure hue, With a band of gold around it.

But a real, true heart, With Cupid's dart Pierced cruelly through its center, A heart this elf With cunning stealth Has long assailed to enter.

Come, eyes of blue, Was it found by you-This best of true lave's token? You say me nsy? Then I'll away To find this heart love broken, Sweet eyes of brown-Nay, look not down -Deep blushes do betray you. Since you've my heart We ne'er will part,

If you will take me, too-what say you?

Written for the Indianapolis Sentinel. META WOODRUF.

By Mrs. Addie Deitch Frank.

CHAPTER VIII.

Dinner was over, and all were again assembled in the drawing-room. Mr. Woodruf excused himself and returned to his wife. He found her up and dressed.

"Ah, Lina, I am glad you are feeling better; are you able to go down stairs?" "They are getting along better without me than they would with me. Dear Clive, forgive me, but I can scarcely endure to be in Meta's presence, as she seems to treat me with such contempt." "If she does, I do not think she is conscious of it herself. Nevertheless, I shall speak to her about it."

"You must not, Clive, under any circumstances, as she might think I was trying to turn you against her, and you know, dear Clive, I would not do that."

"I am sure of this much, that my wife would make her love me more than she does, if it were possible. I hope you will get this out of your mind, and that in the future you will be fast friends." "I hope so, too, as it is not pleasant for enemies to live under the same roof." she replied, at the same time thinking of how soon she would make the house too miserable for this girl to remain in it. She must get rid of her, and that was the only way in which it could be accomplished. "By the way, Lina, your friend seems to be perfectly enraptured with the girls, hope they will all come out heart free."

"You need have no fear for Arthur; his heart is already given to one he loves." "Then I had better warn the girls, especially Gertie, before it is too late." "Perhaps it would be best-but do not mention one word of it to Arthur."

"You are, indeed, fortunate in being in his confidence. Did he also confide to you ber name?"

Line turned her face away from her husband; she was afraid he might read therein ber life's secret.

"Yes, yet I dare not reveal it," "Not even to your husband?"

"Not even to my husband. What is the difference, since it can give you no pleasure in knowing it?"

"You are right. Yet, I am even jealous of my wife's thoughts." Soon after Mr. Woodruf left the drawingroom! Gertie slipped out into the park, leaving Meta and Arthur alone. Meta felt very uncomfortable alone with the man she knew was practicing such a base deception upon her father; that of loving his wife. Yet she sometimes thought when she heard him talk that at heart he was good, that his infatustion for Lina was the result of a powerful influence, on her part, over him. "Miss Woodruf, do you feel able to play for me to-day? I am really thirsting for some good music,"

"Indeed, sir, I am very sorry for you, but I can not oblige you this time. Wait until Gertie returns. I heard Mrs. Woodruf playing and singing for you yesterday." "Yes. She used to sing the same songs to me years ago, when we were first-I mean when we first knew each other." "I dare say they brought back many pleasant thoughts of days ever to be remembered. You remember, Mr. Braden, we were talking at the dinner table of fashionable society; now let us reverse the subject, and talk of home society—of girls who, like me, know nothing of any other but this."

"Nothing could please me more than to hear you handle this subject in the way I think you capable of doing; getting out of it all the pure and noble traits. In fact, all the gold of home society."

"I do not mean to treat it in that way; but ean to extract the brass. To begin with, want to tell you of an incident that happened a short time ago. There was a lady who married one man and loved another. Her husband was very much devoted to her, and the thought of her ever being untrue to him never entered his mind. One day this lady's lover came to pay them a visit and was welcomed by his bost as only a true, hospitable man can welcome a friend. But the inflaence of this lady over her lover was so great as to almost drive him mad. He begged her to leave her husband and go with him, which she did. After he had her all to himself, when every tongue was speaking bitterly against them, his infatuation soon died out. He almost cursed the woman he had almost worshiped, and left her to ber misery and stame, and returned home a wiser man. He was true at heart, though, and soon died of grief. What is the matter, Mr. Braden? I hope I have said nothing wrong."

"Nothing, only my head was a little dizzy.
Go on, tell me more, Did the lady's husband ever forgive her and take her home again?" he asked impatiently.

"No, and I think he did right. If she did not love him, why did she marry him? I have no sympathy for any one who will do as she had done; neither have I for a man who will betray the confidence of any one, se ber lover did her husband."

"What is your opinion as to what this man ought to have done?" "He should have torn himself away from her, and remained away. It is true, he might have suffered—the world might have looked dark and gloomy to him, yet it would not have killed him; and suppose it had? Is not death preferable to the sin he committed and the trouble he caused?"

"I would to God that the world contained the judgment, the power of soting and | period.

thinking as you do," Arthur said, passion-"You must not talk to me as though I never did anything wrong, for I often do.

But Mr. Braden, we can all learn to judge right from wrong in everything." "We might be able to judge between the two, yet not be capable of always accepting the right." "I do not see how that could be possi-

"In this way, some of us are too weak to resist temptation.

'Mr. Braden, you are wrong. Pardon my liberty in saving this, for 'wherever there is a will there is a way." "That may be true, yet with some the will is not strong enough to keep them in the right way." 'You are wrong again. Some people be come discouraged and accept the wrong because it seems so much easier, and it may be for the time being, but in the end it can only bring disgrace. It every one would make up their minds to accept the right and say 'I can and will,' they would meet with SUCCEES,"

"How easy it is for you to say these things."

"And is it hard for you to do?" "I find it so sometimes This, then, is some of the brass or dress of home society. Give me some of the gold now, and perhaps

I shall be satisfied," "I will give it to you as I know it to be. Imagine you see a devoted father with an only child-a girl-the father's arms around her, and her head resting on his broad breast. The face is upturned to his, full of life and happiness. The father bends his head and kisses the forehead of his darling often. They love each other more than their own lives. Now, Mr. Braden, is that gold enough for you?"

"Yes; none purer than that can be found." "Then would you not feel sorry to see a third person step between this happy father and daughter?" "So much so, that if it were in my power to prevent it, I would."

"Do you recognize the characters?" "Yes, and sympathize with you as much as one can who has had no experience of this kind. But you may all be happy yet."
"I hope so, yet I doubt if we ever will. But I shall try to make the best of it for papa's sake. There is some more of the brass of home society," she said, sadly.

Here the conversation was interrupted by the entrance of Dr. Grey and Gertie, and soon at er by Mr. and Mrs. Woodraf, the latter looking strong and well. "Why Doctor! I am heartily glad to see How am I ever to repay you for your kind attention and care of my daughter?

asked Mr. Woodruf. "By saying nothing more about it. There, not another word in my praise, as it was through the good nursing of Miss Harris that Meta is here now."

"Uncle Clive, you must not believe all he says, as it is only through; modesty that he declines to hear you," interrupted Gertie. "Then I shall wait until I get him to myself; then if he utters one word of praise or attempts to lay this honor upon my niece, he will get himself into trouble."

The Doctor stayed for tea, and thelevening passed by pleasantly. Lina Woodruf kept her eyes on Arthur, and Meta was thinking that she must be more discreet and not allow them to be alone so long again. She noticed that Arthur was very attentive to Meta and seemed to enjoy being near ber and hearing her converse. Why should he not enjoy the society of a young and beautiful girl like Meta Woodruf? Young as she was, she was well read and seemed to always have an opinion of her own about everything, which, combined with her winning ways, fitted her for a position envied by so many ladies—that of being a good entertainer. And she was so different from the ladies he had been used to associating with, so free from conceit; a mind not yet corrupted by fashion, and it is hoped it never

Kennedy Murder Trial.

Special to the Sentinel. RUSHVILLE, Ind , Jan. 9.—The testimony in the case of the State vs. William Kennedy was begun this morning, Judge Moor, of Greensburg, Thomas & Spann, of this city, and Major Charles Blackburn, of Cincinnati, being for the defendant. Kennedy is the man who shot young Baker, at Greensburg, on the day of the Logan rally last fall. He is a genteel looking young man, with a very badly shaped head, and is said to be quite an accomplished pickpocket. The jury is composed of good common sense young men, and Kennedy will get justice, which every one thinks should be the end of the rope.

Two Young Men Drowned,

WORTHINGTON, Ind., Jan. 9 -- On New Year's Day two young men by the name of Ote Kanoy and Harvey, living at Johnstown, this county, went out to take up their traps, which they had set out along the river bank, both in an old skiff. Night came and the men did not come home. Next morning search was at once instituted for them, but of no avail, until on Thursday evening they were found drowned in a drift in Eel River. having been drowned some eight days. Both young men bore a good character and were loved by the citizens who knew them very

CONGRESS AT WORK.

Senators Not Anxious to Pass an Inter-State Commerce Bill Against Railroad Monopolists.

The House in Committee of the Whole Consider a Large Number of Private Bills.

THE FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS.

The Senate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9-A bill passed directing the transfer of one of the vessels of the Greely relief expedition to the Treasury Department for a revenue cutter for use in the waters of Alaska, and authorizing the retention of the other two for use in the navy as surveying vessels or otherwise.

Mr. Jackson, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably, without amendmendment, the bill introduced by Mr. Allison comprising the legislative provision of the Pension Appropriation bill recently passed by the House. Mr. Jackson said he would call the bill up to-morrow.

A resolution offered by Mr. Wilson was agreed to, calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for a copy of the report of the Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railroad for 1884.

Mr Slater called up the Oregon Central Land Forfeiture bill, which had been in sbeyance subject to Mr. Morgan's motion to

Mr. Morgan said he had learned from some Senators who had voted against his proposed amendment that they had so voted not from opposition to the principle covered by the amendment, but because they did not consider the amendment necessary under the special circumstances of the Oregon Central case. He then withdrew his motion to reconsider. The bill, therefore, stands passed as amended by the Senate. It now goes to the House.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bills upon the calendar. Mr. Garland said during his term in the Senate no question had come before it so intricate as that involved in the proposition to regulate inter-state commerce. What do we understand by "regulating interstate commerce" in the sense meant by the Constitution?-to prescribe rules by which commerce should be governed. While Congress might itself regulate inter-state commerce, where did we find power in Congress to delegate its power to a commission? Delegated power could not be sub delegated. Congress could not divest itself of its legislative power and hand it over to any Commission. It was unheard of that legislative power should be delegated. The powers lodged in the Commission were extraordinary, and Mr. Garland asked Senstors to pause and seriously consider the bill. Mr. Garland concluded by saying he believed greater progress would now be made by recommitting all the bills, and proposed an endments to the committee, who could consider them and report promptly to the

Mr. Cullem-While willing to concede everything possible to Mr. Garland, whom he regarded, he said, as one of the most emipent lawyers in the Senate or country, he would prefer to have the bill discussed in the Senate instead of in the committee. He this Inter State Commerce bill was no longer to be a foot-ball, and that there was a determination that something be done with it. Mr. Dawss said the many suggestions made in the past few days were well calculated to make the Senate seem to want to do something about this question, while the Senate was really taking care that nothing be dona. The Senate had it now in its power to do something, and it ought to do it and not refer the subject to a committee, there to be allowed to sleep the sleep of death.

After further debate participated in by Bayard, Cullom, Harrison, Ingalls, Slater, Maxey and Jones, of Florida, the motion to recomit was rejected by a vote of 18 to 24. Mr. Cullom said that when, after discussion, the Senate bill should be perfected, he would move to amend the House bill by substituting the Senate bill for it.

Mr. Wilson's amendment making it unlawful for railroads to discriminate against localities or individuals was added to the

Mr. Vance proposed an amendment making it unlawful for railroads to charge small shippers higher rates than large shippers. The subject to which the bill related, he said, constituted the coming question in American politics for the next twenty years. The public were not willing to commit the commerce of the country for all times to the greed and to the capacity of the railroad, without endeavoring to protect themselves against extortion. There was no reason why railroads should not be as popular as they were necessary. They were public servants, and were no more justified in charging a poor man or small shipper more for the service rendered him than was charged for a like service to a rich man or large ship-per. It would be like the case of a Judge who should feel justified in imposing a light penalty on a man who was often in court because he was a wholesale offender, and imposing a heavy enalty on a man who was honest enough to be occasionally brought into court.

Mr. George supported Mr. Vance's amendment. If the proposed amendment was adopted small enterprises would be encouraged and impetus given to the efforts of energetic men who do not happen to have a large capital. Mr. George cited many illustrations of the incongruity of discriminations of railroad charges in the South, to the great disadvantage, he said, of Mississippi. Mr. Brown moved to amend the amen !ment of Mr. Vance by adding to it that, "10 merchant shall sell a larger package or quantity of goods at a smaller per. cent than he charges for a smaller package of goods of like quantity, if the goods have been produced in, or transported from, another state, so as to fall within the power of Congress to regulate inter state commerce." Before Mr. Brown's smile at his own joke had quite disappeared the Senate went into executive session and soon adjourned until House.

Monday.

The House went into Committee of t'e Whole, Mr. Cox, of New York, in the chair, on the Private Calendar.

When the committee rose the following bills were passed: For the relief of A. H. Herr. Serah E. Webster, John M. Dorsey and William F. Shepard, Nevada; O L. Cochran, Texas; A. D. Schenck, Yost Harbough, John F. Severance, William M. Thomas and Elizabeth Carson. Authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to the Interior Department certain parts of Camp Douglas Military Reservation in Utah: for the relief of the legal representatives of A. J. Guthrie; for the rehef of certain citizens of Marion County, Mr Breckinridge introduced a bill for the appointment of a Southwestern River Commission. Referred.

Recess until 8 p. m.; evening session for the consideration of pension bills. The House, at its evening session, passed twenty-one pension bills, and adjourned until to morrow.

Canada Alarmed at a Shadow. QUEBEC, Jan. 9 - The Le Courier du Canada newspaper, discussing the recent article of the London Times on the Nicaraguan Canal difficulty and the possibility of a rupture between England and the United States, adds: "There is no doubt Canada would become the theater of operations, and in our case we would have no right to protest and refuse to allow ourselves to be slaughtered like sheep, and we are asked to endure all the calamities and all the horrors of war to defend England's interests in Central America. Probably Fatally Stabbed.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.-Thomas Phalen, said to be Superintendent of the Kansas City work-house, was stabbed and probably fatally wounded in the office of O'Donovan Rossa to-day by a man named Barry. The men quarreled, presumably in relation to Irish National affairs. Phalen opened fire with his revolver upon his assailant when both reached the street. Barry was locked up in Oak - Street Station, and Phalen removed to the Chambers Street Hospital, where, it is thought, he will die.
